Exchange-traded funds (ETFs) are subject to market volatility and the risks of their underlying investments, which may include risks associated with investing in smaller companies, foreign securities, equity securities, commodities, and fixed income investments. Foreign securities are subject to interest rate, currency exchange rate, economic, and political risks, all of which are magnified in emerging markets. ETFs that target a small universe of securities, such as a specific region or market sector, are generally subject to greater market volatility, as well as to the specific risks associated with that sector, region, or other focus. ETFs that use derivatives, leverage, or complex investment strategies are subject to additional risks. Each ETF has a unique risk profile, detailed in its prospectus, offering circular, or similar material, which should be considered carefully when making investment decisions. There can be no assurance that an ETF will achieve its stated objectives.

The return of an index ETF is usually different from that of the index it tracks because of fees, expenses, and tracking error. Unlike mutual funds, ETF shares are bought and sold at market price, which may be higher or lower than their NAV, and are not individually redeemed from the fund. The degree of liquidity can vary significantly from one ETF to another, and losses may be magnified if no liquid market exists for the ETF's shares when attempting to sell them. Past performance is no guarantee of future results.

Diversification and asset allocation do not ensure a profit or guarantee against loss.

Investors should consider carefully information contained in the prospectus, or if available, the summary prospectus, including investment objectives, risks, charges, and expenses. You can request a prospectus by calling 561-361-1100. Please read the prospectus carefully before investing.

The information and strategies contained herein are strictly for illustrative and educational purposes and does not constitute an offer to sell or a solicitation of an offer to buy securities. Investment products described herein may not be offered for sale in any state or jurisdiction in which such as offer, solicitation, or sale would be unlawful or prohibited by the specific offering documentation.
